

Seven Steel Balls:

1 Refusing the logic of the what-already-is you affirm the generative line leading to an I-know-not-where.

2 Ignoring the bureaucrats that tell you history is past you declare nothing is finished except the management of what-has-been in the name of a moribund present.

3 Seeing it for what it is - a grid of the possible - you re-write the symbolik in your own vernacular and on your own terms.

4 Assuming your own causality you put yourself before that which - it is claimed - determined you in advance.

5 Surveying what is offered on a day-to-day basis you howl with laughter and take the not-given.

6 The world is never decided in advance and you will not tie yourself to any plans or projections that proceed from the assumption that it is.

7 You are not fooled by the mirrors offered up but identify with an image that is yet-to-come and that will be of your own making.
